

DAY ONE, ROACH MODE

Gajab Content Channel — Ideal Follower Profile, Emotion Map & Week 1 Launch Plan

The operating document for the audience-capture channel: who we're talking to, what we're making them feel, which assets and platforms carry it, and exactly what goes out on Day 1 and across Week 1.

Prepared for: Zoheb (creative) & Aditya (distribution/community)

Date: July 27, 2026

Companion to: Riding the Wave — Gen Z GTM Playbook for Gajab

Scope & a Correction Worth Flagging

This channel is general audience-capture content, run ahead of the product push per the Zo/Aditya thread — the point is to bank an audience and learn what lands before layering product content on top. It builds directly on the persona work in the Gen Z GTM playbook (the resilience/“cockroach” identity, @gajabroach-style naming).

One correction before platform planning

TikTok has been banned in India since mid-2020. If this channel's primary audience is India-based, TikTok is off the table for organic posting — Instagram Reels and YouTube Shorts are the real primary/secondary pair, not TikTok. This plan is built around that assumption; if Gajab is targeting the India diaspora or a non-India market, TikTok can be added back in as a third platform — flag which it is and I'll adjust.

Ideal Follower Profile (IFP)

Not a demographic slide — a working sketch of the specific person the channel needs to earn a follow from, used to filter every content idea below.

Dimension	Profile
Age / life stage	17–26. Student, first job, gig-hustling, or early founder — someone whose income and routine are both still unstable.
Where they live online	Instagram Reels + Stories (primary), YouTube Shorts (search/discovery), X (community/banter layer), Discord or close-friends circles for the people who go deeper.
Money mood	Price-aware and ad-skeptical (deinfluencing-literate), but still follows and buys from things that feel “made for me” rather than sold to me.
Humor register	Dry, self-aware, chronically-online references. Low tolerance for corporate tone; instant cringe-detection for brands performing relatability.
What earns a follow	One relatable pain point landed with a genuinely funny or sharp angle, delivered by something that feels like a consistent “someone,” not a logo.
What earns a stay	Consistency of voice, getting replied to, feeling like part of an in-group rather than an audience.
What earns a conversion (later)	Weeks of trust, not one ad — this channel is not the sales channel, it’s the reason the sales channel gets believed.

Emotions to Tap

Emotion	Why it works	Content angle
Resilience / pride	Reframes shared hardship as an identity to be proud of, not a complaint.	“We survived this” posts — remote learning, gig economy, algorithm changes, AI job anxiety.
Relief / humor	Laughing at a shared struggle lowers guard faster than any pitch.	Meme-format posts, deadpan captions on universal small frustrations.
Belonging / us-vs-them	Naming the in-group gives people something to claim in their own bio.	“Roach army”-style community naming; content that speaks as “us,” not “you.”
Validation	“Finally someone said it” is the single strongest share trigger.	Blunt, specific truths about the audience’s daily reality, stated plainly.
Curiosity / FOMO	Keeps people checking back instead of one-and-done viewing.	Serialized bits (“part 2 tomorrow”), running jokes, teased reveals.
Mild rebellion	Positions the channel against corporate/ad culture, not selling into it.	Anti-marketing marketing — jokes about how brands usually talk to this audience.

Faceless, Avatar, or Real Face?

Decision needed before Day 1 (referenced but left open in the Zo/Aditya thread). Recommendation:

Go avatar-led, not fully faceless, not a real employee's face

A fully faceless channel (pure reposts, text-on-screen only) caps how much trust it can build — Gen Z bonds with a consistent “someone.” A real employee's face creates a different risk: the channel becomes dependent on one person, and it's fragile if they leave or go viral for the wrong reason. A recurring illustrated/branded avatar (the gajabroach mascot from the GTM playbook) gets both benefits — a consistent character the audience can recognize and talk to, with none of the single-person fragility, and it's inherently more memeable and shareable as a character.

- Minimum viable avatar for Day 1: a simple illustrated mascot (static image is enough to start) plus a consistent caption voice — a fully animated character can come later once the voice is validated.
- The avatar “speaks” in captions/text overlays first; a voice (VO or on-camera cameo) can be layered in once the account has traction and the team is comfortable being the face behind the character.

Assets & Platforms

Platform	Role	Format
Instagram Reels + Feed	Primary	15–30s vertical video, trending audio where it fits, meme/caption-driven; static carousel for text-heavy bits.
Instagram Stories / Close Friends	Daily presence + inner circle	Polls, behind-the-scenes, day-in-the-life, early-access teasers.
YouTube Shorts	Secondary / search discovery	Repurpose top-performing Reels 1:1, no separate production needed.
X (Twitter)	Community + reply-guy layer	Text posts, screenshot-bait, replies to adjacent viral posts, weekly thread.
TikTok	Only if targeting non-India / diaspora audience	Same specs as Reels — hold until audience geography is confirmed (see $00).

Weekly Content Pillar Structure

A repeatable weekly rhythm so the calendar doesn't need to be reinvented each week — pillars are from the GTM playbook, mapped to specific days.

Day	Pillar	Goal
Mon	We Survived This	Open the week with a relatable pain + resilience reframe — sets the emotional tone.
Tue	Trend-Jacking	React same-day to whatever's actually moving that week.
Wed	Behind the Curtain	Unpolished BTS — keeps the account feeling human mid-week.
Thu	Community Made It	Remix/duet audience replies from the week so far; credit loudly.
Fri	Unhinged / High-Shareability Meme	Peak weekend-scroll energy, optimized for shares.
Sat	Low-effort presence	Story poll or light repost — maintain cadence without forcing production on a weekend.
Sun	Sunday Scaries / Reflective	Emotional, resilience+humor close to the week; primes Monday's reopening.

Cadence

1 feed post/Reel per day minimum, 2–3 Stories per day, replies to comments within 2 hours during active hours, 1 X thread per week. Test posting around local lunch (12–1pm) and evening scroll (7–9pm) windows — treat as a hypothesis to A/B, not a fact.

Day 1 Plan

Time	Action
Pre-launch	Lock handle across Instagram/X/YouTube (see GTM playbook §04 for options). Set bio, profile image (avatar), and link. Post the mascot as the profile image so Day 1 content has a face to react to.
AM	Post 1 — Identity reveal Reel: “hi, we’re @gajabroach. we survive everything. here’s why we exist.” Sets the bit in the audience’s first exposure.
AM	Story 1 — Poll: “are you also built like a cockroach?” (yes/obviously). Cheap engagement, tests the bit lands before doubling down.
Midday	Seed engagement: reply/engage from the account on 10–15 friendly or adjacent accounts — gives the algorithm and early visitors social proof the account is active.
PM	Post 2 (if a trend is live) — first same-day trend-jack, filtered through the resilience lens. If nothing’s trending, skip; don’t force it on Day 1.
PM	Story 2 — BTS teaser: “what we’re building here, in 3 slides.”

Week 1, Day by Day

Day	Format	Content	Goal
1	Reel + Poll	Identity reveal — who this account is, the bit, the tone.	Set the persona; first follows.
2	Reel	Trend-jack — react to whatever’s live that day through the resilience lens.	Prove the account is fast, not scripted.
3	Carousel/BTS	Behind the curtain — a real, unpolished team moment.	Humanize the avatar; build trust.
4	Reel + Reply push	Community prompt: ask a direct question, remix the best replies into a Story.	Seed the first UGC loop.
5	Meme Reel	High-shareability humor piece, timed for weekend scroll.	Peak reach/share day.
6	Story only	Light poll or repost — low production, keep cadence.	Maintain presence without weekend strain.
7	Reflective Reel	Sunday-scares resilience piece, sets up Monday’s reopening.	Emotional close; prime next week.

Owner	Scope
Zoheb	Creative production — assets, captions, visuals, the mascot/avatar itself. Populates the calendar above with ready-to-upload content.
Aditya	Documentation, planning, distribution, community management, posting, engagement, and analytics. Owns the calendar's execution once creative lands.

Open item from the thread

Aditya flagged he doesn't have standing access to the repurposing tool he consults with elsewhere (trial access only, not core-team). Until that's resolved, treat Week 1 content as manually produced against this calendar rather than assuming the tool is repurposing it automatically — revisit once/if extended access is granted.

Next: Zoheb populates Day 1–7 creative against this structure; Aditya confirms posting windows and sets up reply/monitoring cadence before go-live.
